and Tomorrow*

An Employer Resource

The California Employer Advisory Council (CEAC) is your connection to information on employment and workforce development issues. As the nonprofit, statewide umbrella organization for approximately 50 local Employer Advisory Councils (EACs) located throughout California, the CEAC:

- Provides low cost, timely, and high impact employment law, workforce development, and HR practice education and training to employers through the local EACs.
- Provides links between employers, EACs, and the Employment Development Department (EDD) at the local and state level.
- Works with state agencies to promote regulations, policies, and procedures that are business-friendly.
- Identifies and notifies employers about pending legislation that may impact employers.
- Represents employers on state level panels, commissions, and advisory groups in many areas that affect employers.

California Employer Advisory Council

The CEAC is divided into eight geographic regions, each represented by a Regional Vice President. They provide the connection between the local EACs, located throughout the state, and the CEAC. The EACs are the center of most activities, including seminars and monthly or quarterly meetings throughout the year.

Employer Advisory Councils

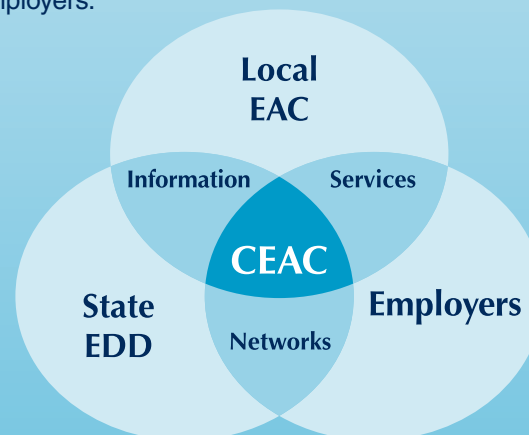

The local EACs are run by volunteer boards consisting of local employers representing a wide variety of industries. The EACs partner with local EDD staff to provide information to local employers about relevant employment issues, including EDD programs and services, as well as general HR and employment law issues. Communication between EDD and local employers helps EDD identify ways to improve its services and employers gain greater awareness of EDD services.

The EACs also support local workforce development efforts, sponsor veterans' outreach programs, and provide scholarships to local youth.

Important Resources for Members

- Stay current with changes in employment law through expert speakers at general membership meetings.
- Save time and money by learning better ways to use EDD's recruiting, interviewing, and placement services.
- Network with peers.
- Keep abreast of current information through CEAC and EAC newsletters.
- Have a voice in EDD procedure and policy through a direct link to EDD's management.
- Plan and attend seminars about employment law and HR practice, including EDD programs in job service, unemployment insurance, disability insurance, and employment tax; personnel administration; wage/hour issues; equal employment opportunity; ADA compliance; federal and state leave laws; and other issues of day-to-day importance to California employers.

Employers become members of the CEAC when they join their local EAC

Additional Services

- Management Hotline – For members only, this hotline provides personal assistance when you have specific questions about employer-employee policies and procedures. The Hotline is staffed by an employment law attorney.
- Discounted Seminar Fees – Members receive a discount for local EAC seminars on topics such as labor law and human resources to name a few.
- Annual Conference – Each year, the CEAC and EDD co-sponsor a popular conference that brings together the statewide EACs. The conference features keynote speakers and interactive workshops covering valuable information that can help your business succeed.
- Professional Affiliations: The CEAC is affiliated with organizations such as the California Chamber of Commerce, California Workforce Investment Board, Small Business Employer Advisory Committee, Labor Market Information Advisory Group, Governor's Small Business Advocate's Office, and others. These affiliations offer employers representation with these groups, information, and, in some cases, benefits such as discounted materials or memberships.
